"I already built you a website."

Cold-call script for selling a finished site · $500 · about 5 minutes per call

HOW TO SOUND

Calm & slow

A little slower and lower than feels natural. Fast and high sounds like a robocall.

Statements go down

"I built you a website." Flat at the end, never rising like a question.

Pause on purpose

After anything important, stop. Let them talk first. Silence is fine.

The favour is done

You're showing finished work, not asking for anything. Stand up and smile.

THE CALL

↓ DOWN confident statement · ↑ UP soft, real question · ‖ PAUSE stop talking · ● SILENCE don't speak first

1 — Confirm who you're talking to ↑ UP

> "Hey, is this [Business]?" … "Is this [Owner]?"

Not the owner? "When's a good time to catch them?" Get a time, thank them, hang up. Don't pitch the staff.

2 — Who you are, in one breath ↓ DOWN

> "Hey [Name], this is [You], I'm a web designer here in [city]."

Say the city. Being local builds trust.

3 — Cut to the chase ‖ PAUSE

> "I'll be quick, I know you're busy."

4 — Why you called ↓ DOWN

> "I was looking at [Business] on Google Maps, love what you guys do, by the way, and when I clicked through to your website, it looked pretty outdated."

Then name one specific thing: stock photos · hard to read on a phone · booking doesn't work · no menu. It proves you looked.

5 — Let them react ● SILENCE

> Whatever they say: "Totally, honestly most places around here are the same."

Agree with them. Never argue.

6 The hook ↓ DOWN

> "So I went ahead and // already designed you a new one."
>
> "It's done, it has your hours, your [menu / services], your number. Can I text you the link?" ↑

7 Send it while you're still on the call

> "Sending it now… take a look, I'll hang on."

Let them scroll. If they go quiet: "What's your first impression?"

8 Their opinion first, price second ↑ UP

> "What do you think? Honest opinion, I can take it."

Want changes? Write them down: "Easy, that's included."

9 The price ↓ DOWN then ● SILENCE

> "If you want it, it's yours for five hundred, one time."
>
> "An agency would usually charge a few thousand and take weeks. This one's already built."
>
> "Does that work for your budget?" ↑

Then wait. Whoever talks first after the price usually loses.

10 Close or follow up

Yes	Needs to think	No
"Awesome, text or email for the details?" Agree the next step and a date.	"Totally fair. Cool if I check in [Thursday]?" Get a day.	"No problem, thanks for looking. The link's yours if you change your mind."

> Every call ends with: "What's the best way to reach you, text, call or email?"

WHEN THEY PUSH BACK

THEY SAY	YOU SAY
"Who are you? How'd you get my number?"	"It's on your Google listing. I'm local, I build sites for businesses around [city]."
"We already have a website."	"Totally, that's why I called. Just look at the new one side by side, no pressure."
"I don't have time."	"Completely get it. Can I text you the link and call back [day] at [time]?"
"$500 is too much."	"What would make it work for you?" Know your lowest price before you call. Offer to split the payment before you lower the price.
"Is this a scam?"	"Fair question. You don't pay anything until you've seen it and you're happy. It's already live, here's the link."
"My nephew does our website."	"Nice. Happy for him to look too, the code's clean and easy to work on."
"Just send me an email."	"For sure, what's the best email?" Then follow up within the hour.

BEFORE YOU DIAL

Link ready
The new site's preview link, ready to text.

One flaw
Their current site open, with one specific problem in mind.

Owner's name
From Facebook, Google or their About page.

Timing
Mid-morning or mid-afternoon, never their rush hour.

SETTLE THESE BEFORE YOU CALL

- [ ] What $500 includes
  Who pays for hosting, connecting their domain, how many rounds of changes.
- [ ] "Market price"
  Only quote a comparison you can back up.
- [ ] Their facts are right
  Check the hours, menu and phone number on the new site against Google that day.
- [ ] It's a preview
  The site is hidden from Google until they approve. Say it's a preview link, not their new address yet.

Texting rule: send the link only after they say yes on the call. Cold-texting a sales pitch to a cell phone can break US texting law (TCPA).
